

ROISIN O'HAGAN

Listen to "Midnight Indigo"

OUT 18th June

Roisin O'Hagan is a singer-songwriter from Essex, UK, who has been writing, performing and releasing music since she was 12 years old.

Having grown up in a musical household, Roisin was inspired to create songs that uphold storytelling songwriting at its core, much like the music she grew up listening to such as Counting Crows, Taylor Swift, Tom Petty, Bruce Springsteen, Ed Sheeran and Coldplay.

Following her 2022 EP, Dreamstate, which was a Nashville-recorded country/pop EP, Roisin is now entering a new chapter, as she begins to unveil her most authentic work today. As she opens up about difficult themes from a real, raw and human approach, Roisin pulls listeners into her world. A departure from her previous country/pop releases, her latest single "Midnight Indigo" sees Roisin exploring a mix of pop, rock and singer-songwriter elements.

"Midnight Indigo" narrates the story of two people and the toxic dynamic between them. The songwriter explains, "There is some kind of undeniable, toxic passion between them that neither can leave alone. That is until eventually one takes the power and leaves the situation with no real explanation, apology or closure." The two individuals both know they are playing a losing game but are too afraid to pull the trigger, until one finally instigates its demise.

The angsty track is fuelled with driving guitars, upbeat percussion and move-inducing melodies. Through determined vocals and storytelling lyrics that are both honest and playfully blunt, Roisin chants, "You're a nightmare and I can't stop dreaming, if not us then who do I believe in, in another life I'd be running from you."

As an independent artist, Roisin has supported Chris Shiflett (Foo Fighters) on tour, performed for Whispering Bob Harris (BBC Radio 2) and BBC Introducing and been named a Fender Undiscovered Artist finalist. As she embarks on this new journey, 2024 is set to be an exciting year for Roisin O'Hagan, kicking off with "Midnight Indigo."
